205. Lecture: Freud and Jung. An unexpected encounter. Working in a clinical case of fetichism.

In this lecture I will show how, in a clinical case, tools from different psychoanalytical theories can work together, referring mainly to the clinical practice of Freud and Jung. In the first two parts, I will present the description of a clinical case and how, in a first stage, the patient was treated in psychotherapy with an approach based on Jungian analytic psychology. I will also show which obstacles appeared in the process. In the third part of the papers historically contextualized fictional story is presented, that discusses Jung's and Freud's real cases. Although Freud and Jung followed different paths after 1919, I understand that there was a strong common root between them, so that they could never move apart from each other. The myth built on the conflict, which took place between them in 1919, exacerbated the differences and the idea that their differences were impossible to be bridged. From this historical moment, there was a need to split in depth psychology. The fourth part shows what happens, when I decided to go back to the clinical case with a more Freudian clinical approach. What seemed to be stagnant when treating it with Jungian tools, started to move again and a new perspective opened. After working with two different approaches, within in a period of sixteen months, the different psychodynamic and understanding of the case can be shown. This is described in the fifth part. The final part presents the prognosis of the case and how I could continue to work, integrating different theories of depth psychology.

315. The Analyst at Work

A series of seminars exploring the fundamental elements of analytic work. Each session will include a theoretical introduction followed by a discussion of pre-assigned readings as well as relevant clinical material.

The seminars are intended as a clinically-oriented overview of the most important phenomena that unfold and take shape when an analyst is in session as well as an introduction to contemporary conceptualization of analytic work:

1. Setting the stage: the analytical attitude
2. The internal and external setting
3. The analyst's professional novel
4. The analyst's internal world
5. Forms of analytic contact
6. The intersubjective field
7. Field dynamics
8. Forms of analytic experience
9. Aesthetic experience and analytic process

(Max. 15 only for students that are already working with patients)

Self-experience seminar: Rumpelstilzchen

Friday, 28th – Sunday, 30th June 2024

Seminar 290

Self-experience seminar: Using "Rumpelstilzchen" in analytical practice.

Archetypal constellation, active imagination, painting, and symbols are used in analytical practice.

The seminar takes place at the Ferienhaus Alverna, Dorfstrasse 60, 8873 Amden, built as a vacation house for the Franciscan Menzinger Sisters. Check-in at 17:00, Supper 18:00, Session 19:05

Accessible by public transportation, the house enjoys a breath-taking view across the Walensee into the Glarner Alps, an excellent kitchen, and gracious hospitality.

Full pension for two nights beginning with Friday supper and ending with Sunday lunch is 230 CHF payable in cash at the beginning of the seminar; please bring exact change.

Participants also bring a self-made costume of a character or object from the fairytale "Rumpelstilzchen."
